How to disable motion sensor on solar light

Item 1 of 1 This energy-efficient solar motion sensor light is equipped with high-output LED lights for maximum illumination and brightness. Intelligent solar technology ensures 8 hours of continuous light Dual motion sensor for wide sensor range LED output 1000 Lumens Weather-resistant, heatproof design Intelligent and linkable function "Membership is required to complete an in-club or curbside pickup purchase at Sam's Club." Has your movement sensor been working fine, and now it won't turn off all of a sudden? Don't worry, there is usually an easy fix. The ProblemSome movement sensors have a built-in override functionality. If the override function is engaged, the sensor light will stay on until the override function is disengaged. This override function is engaged when the light switch is turned on and off a few times in quick succession. So if you've been flicking the switch on and off trying to figure out which way is'off', you may have accidentally triggered by power outages (minor fluctuations in the power grid can trick the switch into thinking it's been turned on and off repetitively). This can be utterly perplexing, but doesn't necessarily mean that your sensor light is broken. The SolutionThe only way to turn off the override function is to turn the switch off and wait for 30 seconds to 1 minute before you turn it on again. This should reset the sensor so that it works on motion detection again. If this doesn't work, head to your switchboard and turn off all the lighting circuits in the house and wait for 30 seconds to 1 minute before you turn it on again. If you've tried to reset the override function and your sensor light still isn't working, the sensor itself might be faulty. If this is the case, you'll need to call an electrician to inspect the sensor. How to Avoid ItBecause of this annoying issue and the confusion it causes, Kenner Electrics never recommends sensors with a built in manual override switch. We also try to avoid integrated sensor lights that have a built-in movement sensor, because these usually have the built in override function and they also limits the flexibility of your lighting as the light can only be operated by the sensor (not by a normal light switch) so they can't be made to stay switched on if you want them too without using the built in override function. While they can be a perfect solution in some situations, these integrated sensor lights also remove the choice of having multiple lights connected to a single movement sensor. Instead, we prefer to supply and install independent movement sensors (without built in manual override switches). This means we can mix-and-match, with multiple lights connected to a single sensor. The independent sensors are usually also better quality and have a longer detection range. To achieve the function of a manual override (ability to leave a light switched on that is controlled by a sensor), we can install some additional wiring and configure the switching of the sensor and lights so that the following settings are achieved: If the light switch is 'on', the sensor controlled lights are on (and stay on) If the light switch is 'off', the sensor controlled lights will be turned on when the movement sensor is triggered. For those that want even more control, we can install 3-position switches which have an additional position that fully turns off the sensor + lights so that the light won't be able to turn on (sometimes used if a sensor light is near a bedroom window). By installing independent movement sensors without the built in manual override function, Kenner Electrics ensures that our customers have the greatest flexibility, performance and reliability from their sensor lights. We recommend and install high quality Clipsal Infrascan movement sensors, which are reliable and long-range and great as a general purpose movement sensor. We also have other products which we will recommend depending on your unique situation. Our expert electricians will make sure your lights and sensors are positioned correctly to provide maximum coverage. Visit our website to see how we can help. We are serving the surrounding suburbs in eastern Melbourne Sensors and sensor lights are common place in most family homes these days. They're great to for helping you find your car in the dark, preventing you from leaving the light on for days and for security precautions to keep thieves away! However, its easy to get confused when you accidently turn them off or want to leave the light on and use it normally. Why sensors? Sensors are a great way to reduce energy, increase convenience as well as protect your home and family. How does a sensor work? We usually recommend and install infrared sensors, which work by detecting heat sources within the sensors field of view. The light/s is then automatically switched ON when movement is detected. Such as, when you get out of your car. The light is then switches OFF after the set time has passed. Different sensors have different distances (field of views), timing options, and sensitivity. How do I know if my sensor is working, simply walk in front of it and see if the light comes ON, then watch from a distance to see how long it takes to automatically turn OFF. The connected light switch needs to be left in the ON position. The light should remain OFF until any movement is detected at which point the light switch needs to be left in the ON position. The light should remain OFF until any movement is detected at which point the light switch needs to be left in the ON position. The light switch needs to be left in the ON position. The light switch needs to be left in the ON position. The light switch needs to be left in the ON position. The light switch needs to be left in the ON position. The light switch needs to be left in the ON position. The light switch needs to be left in the ON position. The light switch needs to be left in the ON position. The light switch needs to be left in the ON position. The light switch needs to be left in the ON position at least switch needs to be left in the ON position. The light switch needs to be left in the ON position at least switch needs to be left will automatically turn OFF the associated light/s. Outdoor sensors may also be programmed to turn ON once it's dark. Can I override my sensor to use the light normally? Yes, most sensors will have the ability to override the sensor function altogether and operate the light manually, as necessary. This is done by turning the light switch OFF - ON - OFF - ON - OFF at the switch. When you're ready to use the sensor again, simply turn the light switch OFF and leave it there for at least a minute. When you turn it back ON the sensor will be reinstated. How can I avoid confusion? Where people get confused by sensors is when they accidentally turn them OFF thinking they're just another light switch or can't remember what controls what, or which switch was for the sensor. It happens to everyone, because the light switch is on we're looking for the light to be on, plus the kids love playing with switches which doesn't help! If this sounds like your house - Don't worry, we have some sure fire ways to avoid such confusion! Place a small sticker on the switch that controls the sensor or if you're really sick of the kids turning it OFF by accident you can always tape over the switch so it won't be easily turned OFF. Push Button LED switch If you want a more permanent solution, have a qualified electrician change the switch one it is. Auto/Off/Manual switch The Ultimate Solution If you use your outside lights all the time, you would like to have the light stay ON when you're outside entertaining or you've heard noises and want the light to remain ON for the rest of night, there is a special switch you can change to which will make overriding the sensor really simple if the method mentioned above is not suitable.
